In an effort to restore the moral character of our nation's capital, which has been sullied in recent weeks by the worst wave of mail bombs in modern history, the White House on Friday is inviting Americans across the country to visit the Washington National Cathedral and become witnesses to the president's invocation of American values. The Cathedral — home to the most revered and historic Episcopal Church in the country — was built by American slaveholders and repeatedly used as a battleground during the Civil War. Since then, it's become a refuge for presidents, war and peace and an emblem of the country. Americans will be invited to participate in a Memorial Service to commemorate and honor victims of all the nation's conflicts — from the American Revolution to the War on Terror — and presidents of all political parties from across the country. “We ask that you honor their memory by joining us in
