A high rate of false-positive screening for hepatitis B virus (HBV) infection has been reported following pretransfusion testing with a combination of O, H, and HBe antigens, but confirmation of the presence of anti-HBs has not been made. The present investigation was undertaken to find the minimum number of donors that should be tested to achieve a false-positive rate of less than 3% when screening is performed with O, H, and HBe antigens. To that end, a source of antisera with very high HBV-specific antibodies was generated by hyperimmunizing rabbits with the University of Kentucky (UK) strain of HBV. Mixtures of UK, O, H, HBe, and chimpanzee (CH) antigens were utilized to test guinea pigs and monkeys. About 200 animals were immunized, and 20 were found to be absolutely immune to infection with HBV after challenge with the UK virus. The animals were hyperimmunized with the British, American, Japanese, and Thai strains of HBV. Sera from a single donor inoculated intradermally into guinea pigs demonstrated considerable antibody activity against UK antigen but no activity against other HBV antigens. Since guinea pigs are not appropriate for testing donor sera for anti-HBs, the animals were then tested for anti-HBs in the presence of antisera from either the same guinea pig or from another animal hyperimmunized with UK virus. If a donor's antiserum was found to contain anti-HBs in the presence of antisera to HBV of the same or a different species, that donor could be assumed to have adequate anti-HBs to justify pooling his or her donations with those of other donors.(ABSTRACT TRUNCATED AT 250 WORDS)News & Stories Wayne State University Sustainability Research Center 4 October, 2012 During the University of Waterloo Sustainable Cities seminar on September 25, 2012, Wayne State University Sustainability Research Center (SUCRO) was highlighted
