PC Utility Manager Crack Mac Screenshots: Windows 7 (Left) & Windows XP (Right) One of the most common issues with hardware is the mouse - it doesn't seem to work properly and you'll constantly get frustrated. No wonder people are on a quest for the perfect mouse. There are lots of mice on the market today, and we've got to see what mouse is best for you. We'll go through the main types of mice, which are the optical, laser and USB mice, and then take a look at the pros and cons. Optical Mouse Optical mice are perhaps the oldest type of mouse around, and it's easy to see why. They work by sending out a beam of light that reflects off your desktop, which in turn is read by a light sensor on the mouse. Unfortunately, they're no longer the most popular type of mouse, as they're also the most expensive. This is down to the fact that they require the use of batteries to work, which means they can easily die out if you don't have a constant supply of batteries. Optical mice can be used for a variety of tasks, such as gaming, but with all their advantages and disadvantages, you might not get on too well with them. They also need to be fairly close to your desktop, as you need to be able to point the light accurately. It may take some getting used to and you might have to experiment a little to find out what works best. Laser Mouse Laser mice are all the rage, and for good reason. They're often the cheaper option, as they don't require any batteries at all. That said, they also require the user to wear special glasses that use a laser to aim the mouse. It's quite an uncomfortable experience, but it's also a very accurate mouse. Pros: Cheaper Uses very little power Cons: Glasses required Requires regular cleaning Laser mice are pretty accurate, which makes them the perfect gaming mouse. But they can be annoying to use if you're not used to them. Plus, they don't work if your computer is too far away, so you may need to sit close to your computer. Laser mice work by scanning the entire desktop, so they don't have to be close. This
